

4 candidates agree once — on energy

Four candidates for the U.S. Senate agreed Thursday night on the need to develop Utah's energy resources, and said with technology now available the state need not have dirty air to do so.

That was about the only point of agreement, however, during a Civic Dialogue television program that ranged over a wide variety of issues from abortion to defense to labor law. The KUTV Channel 7 program is cosponsored by the Deseret News.

Orrin Hatch, Republican candidate, denied he is an ultra conservative. He said he would vote for whatever is right, liberal or conservative. "If Jake Garn is ultraconservative, that's what I am. I believe the same as Jake Garn."

Hatch said Congress now has a 2-1 liberal majority. "We've got to get people back there who speak for Utah, not the big eastern establishment or George Meany," he said. "We need more responsible people back there."

Moss said as third ranking member of the Senate and a member of powerful committees, he is in a position to do more for Utah. "I have worked my way up to a really responsible position in that body." He added that when Utah's interests are at stake he and Garn side together.

Libertarian Steve Trotter said both major party candidates demonstrate one of the basic problems in Washington, the Republicans and Democrats dividing into warring camps quarreling about how to divide the spoils. "We ought to disentangle ourselves from the clammy embrace of the octopus in Washington."

"You both lose sight of the fact that the money is earned by private individuals," Trotter said. "The bipartisan political tinkering with the economy has got to be put to a stop."

On the abortion issue, Moss said he opposes abortion and would support a Constitutional amendment prohibiting abortion except to save the life of the mother.

Hatch, however, said Moss has in the past voted for federal funding of abortions for poor women. "This is immoral and wrong," he said.

George Batchelor, American Party candidate, said, "We spend millions of dollars to defend criminals in this country, but we are willing to take the life of the unborn innocent."

Trotter disagreed, saying abortion should be legal. He challenged the other candidates to say what penalty they would inflict on the young woman who has an abortion. If it is murder, he asked, should she receive the death penalty or life in prison? The other candidates failed to respond.

Moss said Congress has trimmed the President's defense budget, while adding to the Health, Education and Welfare budget. "We differ in priorities."

Trotter said, "We now have sufficient firepower to obliterate most of the world. Enough is enough."

Batchelor said, "We must have the kind of defense where nobody will dare to attack us."

On labor issues, Moss said he voted for the common situs bill because it was requested by the President, though later vetoed by him, and because it would eliminate wildcat strikes. He said right to work has not been an issue on the national level for 10 years.

Hatch said right to work is an issue this year, because the Democratic platform includes doing away with right to work laws. He said the common situs bill was a prelude to appeal of right to work laws. "Moss' record has been 89 percent for big labor," he said.

On foreign policy, Moss said the United States should help developing countries. "I don't believe we should use foreign aid as a bargaining tool," he said.

Hatch said such commodities as wheat could be sold if the Soviets pay top dollar and help American farmers. But, he said, "There is no question we've come out on the short end of detente."

Trotter said trade should be free with all countries, and the more-efficient United States system will come out better than slave nations. "Trade not war is the best way to shrivel up the Russian empire."

Batchelor said the United States should not give any aid or trade to Russia. "We've bailed out Russia nine times," he said.
